IPCP

believes the correct way to do pest control is with the smallest environmental impact possible. This requires:

- Targeting the pests while leaving the pests' natural enemies alone
- Using the least toxic products available
- Using insects' natural behaviors to enhance a program's effectiveness
- Minimizing human and non-target exposure to chemicals whenever practical
- Not putting chemicals into the air/groundwater

IPCP has developed a line of pest control products that uses active ingredients with extremely low toxicity in patented delivery systems that can increase the life of the bait materials and reduce or eliminate environmental contamination.
